I'm writing to announce that the application deadline for the Spring 2011 Glimpse Correspondents Program is November 28, 2010. We've gotten some great applications so far, but we're looking forward to reading more! This is a chance for you - or students, volunteers, teachers, and other travelers you know - to get stories and photography published at a National Geographic supported publication--and get paid for it.

Powered by Matador, and supported in part by the National Geographic Society, the Glimpse Correspondents Program provides talented writers and photographers with a $600 stipend as well as one on one editorial training and support to complete an independent journalistic work based on their experience abroad.

One change to the Correspondents program from before: the previous age restriction (applicants could be no older than 34) has been lifted. Anyone over 18 is eligible.

To learn more, visit: http://glimpse.org/correspondents, and please feel free to pass this email along to anyone else you think might be interested in our program.

I hope to work with your this Spring! Please don't hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Sarah Menkedick

---

Glimpse believes that independent travelers, particularly those who spend significant time abroad, have a unique and often overlooked opportunity to effect positive change around the world. This begins with bearing witness to place, people, culture, and especially the stories and struggles that might otherwise go unrecorded.

---

Sarah Menkedick
Editor in Chief, Glimpse
982 Green St.
San Francisco, CA 94133
sarah@glimpse.org
Glimpse.org